A Tragedy Recalled.

ond-class matter.]

The Governor of Massachusetts and Bos ton City Council Wednesday ordered the release of Charles F. Freeman, the religious fanatic of Pocasset, who in May, 1879, slew his little daughter as an offering to the Almighty. Freeman was the leader of a small company calling themselves Second Adventists in the little Cape Cod village. A supreme egotist and fanatic, he grew to imagine that he was called of God to lead a new religious movement. He preached the idea to his followers, and just before the tragedy he had decided to start out on his state. He called a final meeting of the mission. He called a final meeting of the faithful to assemble at his house on May 1. During the preceeding few days he became impressed with the idea that God demanded of him a great sacrifice as a test of his ed of him a great sacrifice as a test of his faith. He talked over the matter with his wite, and they both became convinced that the Almighty wished the yielding up of their little daughter Edith. They prayed over it long and carnestly, until near daybresk on May 1 they felt that the time had come. Rising from their knees, having spent the night in prayer, they went to the bedroom of their two daughters. The mother held the lamp while the father bared the breast of little Edith, their hest beloved, and plunged a knife into it. Then he took the child in his arms. The little one looked up at him, twined her arms about his neck, murmured simply, her arms about his neck, murmured simply, "Oh, papa!" and died. A few hourstater the neighbors gathered pursuant to invitation. Freeman and his wife seemed not sad, but subdued. A religious service took place. Freeman read the Scriptures and offered prayer. Then he explained the great sacrilice he had been called upon to make, scribed his first resistance to the call of God, his final yielding, and the blessed promise that had come to him that the child would be raised again on the Third day. His followers listened spellbound, most of them believing and accepting all that the fanatic and the lad there is to the content of the fanatic and the lad there is to the content of the content of the lad there is to the call of the content of the content of the content of the call of the content of the call of the content of the call of the call of the content of the call of the ca said. He led them into the next room and showed them the body of the little child, where it lay waiting for the resurrection. Later in the day the dreadful secret leaked out among the sane people of the community, and the arrest of the Freemans soon followed. The strengest part of the story is lowed. The strangest part of the story is the blind faith of their fellowers. An amaz ing scene and almost a lynching followed on the ensuing Third day, Sunday, when the child was buried. The Adventists, the child was buried. The Adventists, most of them, expected the child to rise from its coffin before them, and an attempt feeling is one of grief rather than remorse. Upon the testimony of several experts that he was saue and safe to be at large the Gov-by one of them to defend the murderer in-furiated the other attendants at the funeral.

Mrs. Freeman was released after a brief im-prisonment, and her husband, being found mitted to the State Lunatic Hospital for life. He was never insane on any except religious topics, and for several years his mind has been quite sound on everything. Regarding his terrible deed, his present not guilty by reason of insanity, wa ernor granted his release. A Remarkable Case. An extraordinary case of suspended animation occurred in Boston recently. Four brothers name Stainton, one of them Royson Stainton of Stetson's "Mikado" Company, live in Boston. Two weeks ago on Monday a fifth brother, who has lived in the West, died, it was supposed, at the house of one of his brothers, who was a physician. The supposed cause of death was consumption. Dr. Stainton, however, insisted that his brother was not dead, and though a funeral service was held, which was largely attended, he would not allow the body to be embalmed or buried. Other physiciaus were called in on several occasions, made careful examinations, and pronounced it a genuine case of death. The body was perfectly rigid and cold, and it was impossible to discover the faintest signs There had been no general and marked weakening of the functions, how-ever, and the absence of certain changes in the features after death led Dr. Stainton to hold the ground which he had taken. It was feared that his mind had been affected, and so great a pressure was brought to bear upon him by the other members of the family that on the Thursday following the death he consented to have the body placed in a tomb, where he visited it every six hours. There was no change the first evening, nor at midnight, when the lid was removed, but at 6 o'clock on Friday morning the Doctor noticed that his brother had turned slightly; although he thought the turning might have been the result of the turning might have been the result of muscular contraction. He ordered the casket and its contents to be returned to his least one in their house. Prices fixed, but terms home. Three of the brothers protested, but
